The Conning Tower

WOODROVIAN PROFANITY.

Washington, Dec. 9 .- A remark attributed to the President in the course of his speech to the Democratic National Committeemen, namely, that "the Mexicans will raise hell until they are through," was repudiated officially to-day. -The Sun.

Perhaps, I own, he might have said. Growing o'ertepid in the head, "Those Mexicans may raise some ned!"

I say he might have said that; but I think of when he said "Tut! tut!" The day he missed an easy putt.

By request we shall reprint in Sunday's Tower "The Study Hour," the contribution that won the 1913 watches.

Speaking of The Sunday Tribune-as who is not? (adv't)-the circulation manager told us the other day that the Sunday paper had gained tremendously during the last three months. Highly sensitive to praise, we felt a compliment coming, and hastened, embarrassed, to divert it. "In spite of a Sunday column?" we ventured. "Well," he said, "that might have a little to do with it, at that."

Nu, nu, Geigermann, are you got any suits? Sure, we're overstocked with 'em, and some of 'em is beauts. Some for the city trade and some for the jays, And all of 'em mit dating at two off, thirty days.

The north wind doth blow and we shall have snow and-oh, this is an Advertisers' Mother Goose Rhyme-what will the radiator do then, poor thing? It will use a bit of MELTEN'S PATENT ANTI-FREEZE MIXTURE and keep itself warm on the chilliest days.

THE DIARY OF OUR OWN SAMUEL PEPYS.

December 8 .- All the day at various labours, but with no system; with the result that while I had expended many hours at my desk, yet did I accomplish little. At home it is so pleasant that I had liefer do aught save work; and at the office are come so many to take my time to no purpose that work is exhausting. Came a tailor, for example, to seek my custom; and despite my telling him at the outset that I had no need of him, and would not let him fashion another suit for me if I did require one, yet did this lackwit remain for a long time, repeating his phrases many times. 9.—Talk this day of my Lord Woodrow's message to Congress, and nowhere do I hear approval of it. Fine phrases and clear from him, of a verity, but without the strength that convinces. Yet, poor man, haply he is so beset with drapers and tailors building him wedding-garments he hath not time to do everything. Home early, and found there C. Merz the editor, who, I learn, hath been ill; and my wife feeding him gruel and nursing him.

10-Up by times, weary, what with my wife being unable to sleep for that the wind blew so hard against the windows. At the office all the day, and labouring very hard; and got through a vast deal of work, too. And enjoyed doing it, too; which, perhaps, I should be ashamed of, being too old for such petty pleasures. Yet I take more joy in them than ever I did, and dread the day when I must do weightier work.

COSMICALLY THINKING AFTER SEEING WAR PICTURES.

My dear, I saw thousands of men marching to battle, Fighting in the trenches, taken as prisoners of war, I watched them as they jested in the face of death. I saw the tired, dejected expressions of the prisoners, And knew by their shabby, mud-covered uniforms That life meant nothing more to them Than apathetic existence As brave troops marched by, As dashing cavalry pounded over rolling fields, As I saw men, struck by the enemy's fire, Fall from the charging lines-I thought Of the loved ones they had left behind,

Of the peaceful cities and villages In which they had lived only a short time ago. And I wondered at the great power

That had made them leave all this To walk bravely into death's face and war's desolation. I wondered at the great light

That had so blinded their souls to their bodies,

And at the spiritual treasure Gained at the loss of earthly treasure.

I marveled at the strange unselfishness That made them, so selfishly, hate and despise,

And desire to kill other human beings Who also had forsaken loved ones and contented homes.

All this time I had thought of you, my dear, With whom to part would leave life an aching emptiness,

And me broken-hearted. Then I realized that God had filled the aching emptiness

In the hearts of these brave men With the spirit of Patriotism

Which blinds them to earthly attachments, As the rising sun blinds us to the morning stars.

My Star-it is not morning yet,

But if it ever should be, may God blind me too. CHARLES A. HARRISON.

missioner Katharine B. Dayis of the Department of Correction, was the lone woman on the floor, and she sat at the guest table with thirty men, including practically all the officials in the city government.

Mayor Mitchel made his first appearance in public since his recent illness, and spoke with deep feeling of the loss it would mean to him and the city when Mr. McAneny resigned his present office. Seth Low, president of the Chamber of Commerce, presided, and the other speakers were Morgan J. O'Brien, William C. Breed, of the Merchants' Association; Job E. Hedges and John H. Finley, president of the New York University. George W. Burleigh, chairman of the dinner committee, presented a costly silver tea service to the guest of honor on behalf of the citizens present, each of whom contributed toward it.

Mr. Low declared that the citizens had gathered to do honor to a man whom the whole city loved to honor. Mr. Low declared that the citizens had gathered to do honor to a man whom the whole city leved to honor. He introduced Mayor Mitchel as the first speaker and congratulated him upon his recovery from his illness.

"I am particularly glad that the first time that I have been able to appear in public since my recent illness should be at this dinner in honor of George McAneny," said the Mayor. "This is no perfunctory tribute. I am glad to testify to my appreciation of his services as a public official and to my affection for him as a friend."

The Mayor reviewed some of the great problems that had been worked out since he and Mr. McAneny have been in the city government. The solving of the dual subway problem was Mr. McAneny's greatest work, he said.

"I can more properly pay this tribute to Mr. McAneny's greatest work, he said.
